PART 1: Scenario Questions and Answers

1. What is the primary goal of your email campaign, and how will you measure its success?

   = The main goal of my email campaign is to increase sales during Black Friday by offering special discounts to subscribers. I'll measure success by checking how many people open the email, click on the links, and make purchases. These results will show if the campaign encourages customers to buy quickly.

2. How will you create a sense of urgency in your email to encourage immediate action?

   = To make people act fast, I'll use phrases like "Limited Time Offer" and "Only 48 Hours Left." I'll also include a countdown timer and mention that stock is limited. This will make customers feel they need to buy before the deals end.

3. What visual elements will you include to make your email appealing and on-brand?

   = I'll use bright, high-quality images of the products, bold text for discounts, and colours that match the brand. The layout will be clean and easy to read so customers can quickly see what's on sale and click through to shop.

4. How will you use curiosity to encourage customers to complete their purchase?

   = I'll add a "mystery deal" or "surprise at checkout" message to make customers curious. This will encourage them to complete their purchase to find out what special offer or gift they'll receive.

5. What clear call-to-action (CTA) will you use, and how will it be positioned in your email?

   = My main CTA will be "Shop Now." It will appear near the top and bottom of the email in a bright button colour that stands out. This makes it easy for customers to click and go straight to the sale page.

6. How will the design of the email support the sales strategy?

= The email will look simple and professional, focusing on the products and discounts. Clear sections, bold CTAs, and attractive visuals will guide customers to make quick buying decisions. Everything will be designed to make shopping easy and exciting.
